Superkilen opened in June 2012 because planners wanted to make the area cleaner and more interesting than it was before. The park is half a mile long and is located in the Nørrebro district of Copenhagen. People in the area come from all over the world, and the park shows their different backgrounds. Many of the features in the park are from different countries, for example, the bins are from the United Kingdom. There are lovely benches from Brazil for people to sit on and enjoy the nice views.

The park has three parts: Red Square, Black Market, and Green Park. Red Square is painted red, pink, and orange, and local people go there to have fun and do activities like riding a bike around the cycle track. Black Market is a traditional town square and is busier than Red Square, functioning as a meeting place where people have barbecues. In the middle of the square, there is a fountain from Morocco, and when it lights up at night, the water looks beautiful. Green Park is completely green, longer than the other parts of Superkilen, and has lots of hills, trees, and flowers where people like having picnics and walking their dogs.
