The Lanter Keeper of Cloud Harbor

(1) Cloud Harbor was a city that floated high above the sea. Giant silk balloons, filled with a gas lighter than air, held its towers in the sky. Every evening, twelve-year-old Mira lit the lanterns along the harbor because her grandfather, the old Lantern Keeper, could no longer climb the stairs. Everyone knew Mira as the most careful girl in the city; she never took a step without checking it twice.

(2) One morning, the city began to sink. The balloons were wrinkled and soft. "The gas is leaking," said the Mayor. "Only the Whale of Winds can warm the balloons again, but it comes only when a lantern is lit on the highest tower during a storm." The sky was clear, and nobody knew what to do.

(3) Suddenly, Mira ran to the edge of the tower and jumped onto the back of a passing whale without a second thought. The whale breathed warm air into the balloons, and the city rose slowly because warm air is lighter than cold air. To make the city even stronger, Mira poured a bucket of seawater into every balloon. Cloud Harbor floated higher than ever.

(4) That night, the people cheered, and the Lantern Keeper smiled as he lit one more lantern.
