III. READING COMPREHENSION: Protecting Nicaragua's Biodiversity

20 Points

Environmental Conservation in Nicaragua:

People across Nicaragua are learning more about animal welfare and environmental care every day. If more citizens respected natural habitats, fewer native species like the guardabarranco, sea turtles, and green iguanas would be in danger. The Nicaraguan government and local conservation groups in natural reserves like Bosawas and Río Escalante Chacocente have taken important steps to protect our ecosystems. However, forests still face threats from illegal logging and forest fires. If schools promoted recycling and environmental campaigns continuously, young students would become active conservation leaders in their communities.
