A Day to Remember

Last Saturday, my friend Leo invited me to a street dance festival in the city centre. I had never been to one before, so I was excited. We agreed to meet outside the library at eleven. Unfortunately, I got on the wrong bus and arrived twenty minutes late. Leo didn't mind because he had been watching some dancers nearby.

First, we watched a group of teenagers perform an amazing hip-hop routine. Then a dance teacher invited people from the audience to learn a few moves. Leo joined immediately, but I was too nervous. After a few minutes, he persuaded me to try. I made several mistakes, yet everyone was friendly and encouraging.

At lunchtime, we bought sandwiches and sat in the park. While I was opening my bottle of water, I accidentally dropped it on my trainers. They were completely wet! Luckily, the sun was shining, so they dried quite quickly.

Before going home, we took a photo with the dance teacher. I was tired but happy. The best part of the day wasn't watching the professionals — it was discovering that trying something new could be fun.
