READING PASSAGE: THE ANNUAL HIGHLAND CHALLENGE

The Annual Highland Challenge is a unique multi-sport event that takes place in the north of Scotland every August. Participants from across the world gather to test their endurance across a twenty-kilometer course that includes mountain running, kayaking in freezing rivers, and climbing over high timber obstacles.

Because the course is demanding, all runners have to submit a health certificate signed by a doctor before they are allowed to compete. Organizers strictly enforce this safety measure. Participants do not have to bring their own kayaks or safety helmets, as the event company provides all necessary heavy equipment. However, runners must wear specialized trail shoes and carry a water bottle.

The event is famous not only for its difficulty but also for its celebratory atmosphere. After finishing the race, athletes and spectators gather in a large pavilion for an evening feast. Traditional Scottish food, such as haggis, is served alongside modern vegetarian dishes. Local musicians play live music, and organizers award handmade glass trophies to the top three finishers in each category.

Although the race is challenging, many people return year after year. Next year, organizers are going to add a short five-kilometer race for teenagers. They hope this addition will encourage more local families to participate together. Tickets for spectators sell out months in advance, so people who want to watch the race will need to book their entrance passes early.

1. The Highland Challenge takes place twice a year in Scotland. [____]
2. Athletes must provide a medical document signed by a doctor prior to entering the race. [____]
3. Participants are required to bring their own safety helmets to the event. [____]
4. The obstacle course includes swimming across an ocean bay. [____]
5. Haggis is the only type of food offered during the post-race feast. [____]
6. Winners of the event receive financial cash rewards from the organizers. [____]
7. A new event for younger runners will be introduced next year. [____]
8. Spectators do not need to buy tickets in advance because there is unlimited space. [____]
9. Trail shoes are mandatory gear for all race participants. [____]
10. The organizers plan to expand the main race to thirty kilometers in two years. [____]
