Exercise 1 : Listening and Reading.

A Team Project and a New Challenge

Last month, a group of teenagers at Green Valley School decided to create a digital campaign about environmental protection. They wanted to encourage students to recycle plastic and save water. Before they presented their idea to the principal, they had been discussing different solutions for several weeks. Everyone had a different opinion, so organizing the project was not easy.

Mia, the team leader, suggested creating short videos for social media. The students had been collecting information about pollution before they chose this idea. They divided the tasks: some students wrote scripts, others designed posters, and two classmates recorded videos. Mia had been working on the presentation for hours before she realized that the team needed more examples.

During the following weeks, the group worked hard. They have been sharing their videos with classmates, and several students have been asking questions about recycling. The campaign has been receiving positive comments. However, the team has not been resting much because they have been preparing for a school exhibition.

On exhibition day, the students explained their campaign to teachers and parents. They felt proud because they had been working together for a long time. Their teacher congratulated them on their creativity and organization. The project taught them that teamwork takes patience and effort, but it can help people achieve important goals.
