The Sumatran Tiger

The Sumatran tiger is a majestic, carnivorous mammal native only to the island of Sumatra in Indonesia. It is characterized by its small size compared to other tigers and its dark orange coat with thick, black stripes. This unique pattern helps them blend into the dense tropical rainforests.

Tigers are solitary animals that hunt mostly at night. They eat deer, wild boars, and smaller reptiles. Sadly, their population is decreasing dramatically. Large areas of their natural habitat have been destroyed by illegal logging and forest fires. Consequently, these beautiful creatures are now critically endangered.

1. What makes the Sumatran tiger different from other tiger subspecies?

a. It eats only plants.
b. It has a smaller size and a darker coat.
c. It lives in groups.
d. It can change its color.

2. Based on the text, what kind of food do Sumatran tigers consume?

a. Leaves and fruits
b. Birds and fish
c. Deer and wild boars
d. Insects and seeds

3. Why is the population of the Sumatran tiger decreasing?

a. Because they cannot find clean water.
b. Because their habitat is destroyed by illegal logging and forest fires.
c. Because they are being bred in zoos.
d. Because they migrate to other islands.

4. "The Sumatran tiger is a majestic, carnivorous mammal..." The bold word has a similar meaning to...

a. Weak
