What Happened When We Switched to Video

Last term, our media club designed a short online course to teach students how to edit images. We invited forty students to try it, and thirty completed the final task. Of those thirty, twenty said that captions helped them follow the instructions. At first, we recorded our demonstrations on a phone, but the details were hard to see. We cropped the clips more tightly, so students could focus on the editing tools. We also added a face-to-face practice session after a few students asked for help. Since several learners could only work in the evenings, we kept every video available online. If we had offered the sessions only after school, some learners would have missed out. For our next course, we plan to keep both options.

25. Three quarters of the students invited to try the course completed the final task.

    _____

26. Twenty participants said the captions helped them follow the instructions.

    _____

27. The club cropped the clips so the editing tools would be easier to focus on.

    _____

28. The club removed the online videos as soon as it added a practice session.

    _____

29. Everyone who tried the course could attend sessions after school.

    _____

30. The club plans to offer only face-to-face practice next time.
