Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C or D to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions.

Volunteering, especially when it's done on a regular basis, can help you make new acquaintances. Whether you volunteer for an organisation on a daily, weekly or monthly basis, over time you will develop strong relationships, typically with other volunteers and staff members.

Regular volunteers may get these benefits to a greater degree than people who volunteer infrequently. Consider this: Handing out water at a fundraising run in April and then helping in an orphanage in November is surely easier to squeeze into a activities aren't as likely to help you build relationships over time.

There are benefits and drawbacks to every type of volunteering. For example, volunteering once in a while is often easy to schedule and is something families or busy schedule than volunteering regularly in an office. But those more convenient friends can do together. However, volunteers who take part in occasionally may not feel very connected to the mission of the nonprofits they support or get to know many other volunteers.

Regularly volunteering, on the other hand, makes it more likely that you will develop a deep relationship to the cause and to other staff and volunteers. However, this kind of volunteering requires a longer-term and bigger time commitment. It can also become frustrating if the volunteer's duties aren't a good fit for them.

Still, if people are willing to work toward finding the right fit and making time in their schedules, volunteering on a regular basis can help them get more out of their efforts, including new friends and acquaintances.

A. Occasional volunteering can be done together by families and friends

B. People volunteering occasionally may not feel connected well with the purpose of the activities they do.

C. Regular volunteering needs a long-term commitment.

D. Regular volunteering cannot be frustrating.

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C or D to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions.

Firstly, the most common reason for not volunteering is lack of free time (about half of Americans cite this as the main reason), and is that the volunteer schedules and commitments are too inflexible. Therefore, a possible solution is to make volunteering more accessible and automatic. If working parents are volunteering, it is most likely at their kids' schools, which is a location they are already familiar with. Employers could encourage volunteerism on-site or in a proximate location. Organisations could be more flexible in the way they use volunteer work, including work that could be done at home, or during evening or weekend hours.

Secondly, another very common reason is that people don't have information about where to volunteer, or if they do, the jobs are not meaningful or purposeful. While motivation to volunteer can vary by age, with younger volunteers more motivated by future preparation (such as increasing skills, knowledge, and advancing careers) and older volunteers more likely to cite social values as a reason for volunteering, most people are motivated to volunteer by personal gratification and having a meaningful experience. A solution would be for organisations who use volunteers to make sure they are matching the skills and experience of their volunteers to the roles they have available. Making copies and coffee are certainly not meaningful to most. Some organisations have a short interview process where they discuss the background of the potential volunteer to closely match it to the needs they have.
