The glorious Idul Fitri day may be over but the holiday atmosphere is still high in the air. As an addition to the annual mudik custom, many people use his national holiday as an opportunity to explore some unfamiliar places and embark on a family holiday.

Approaching the end of the Muslim festive season, travel search site, Wego, has recently revealed insights into Indonesian travel trends for this year's Idul Fitri. Wego Indonesia managing director Graham Hills said that Indonesians searched for domestic tripsis greater in numbers this year.

"Domestic travel trends more than tripled this year. Yogyakarta took over from last year's top destination of Bandung for hotel searches, and the city features as one of the most notable movers this year, increasing 78 percent over 2014," Hills explained.

He also said that even though Bali featured as the number one domestic destination for the past two years, this year the island only occupied the fourth position with flight searches to Yogyakarta escalating by 342 percent.

Regarding accommodation options, Indonesians tended to seek higher ranked properties, while taking advantage of cheaper airfares. In 2014, more than half of Wego's Indonesian users sought three-star accommodation listings, but surprisingly this year we've seen a shift toward higher rated hotels. Domestic airfare searches rallied in mid-June, and while average hotel rates seemed to trend a little higher closer to Idul Fitri, the overallaverage price of airfares were around ten percent lower this year," Hills continued.
