The changing coffee shop landscape

At one time, perhaps 20 or 30 years ago, high streets in Britain were dominated by just four or five big chains of coffee shops. However, the last couple of decades have seen independent coffee shops enjoy a massive increase in popularity – and often they're more than just coffee shops. It's not unusual to find a small art gallery in a coffee shop and it's a great opportunity for local artists to promote their paintings in an informal atmosphere while people are relaxing with a drink. Other cafés have become places for people in the local community to connect, offering informal meeting places for charities, campaign groups and other community groups.

- 3 The writer tells us that
- A independent coffee shops didn't exist 30 years ago.
B there are many more independent coffee shops now than 20 years ago.
C the most successful independent coffee shops have art galleries.
- 4 Which statement is true?
- A It's quite unusual to find an art gallery in a coffee shop.
B Some campaign groups have their offices in coffee shops.
C Some coffee shops encourage groups to use their space.

Bean Scene – visited 6th May

From the minute I walked in, I could tell I was going to enjoy Bean Scene. It was a cool day for the time of year, so I took my time while I enjoyed a flat white and a piece of delicious homemade ginger cake, which reminded me of my childhood. Although it's in a busy part of town, the café felt relaxing. It clearly makes an important contribution to the life of the local community, too. There were photos by a local photographer on the walls, and an enormous noticeboard with posters for everything from art exhibitions to craft classes. I would definitely return, even if it was a little expensive.

- 5 The writer's cake
- A made her think about when she was younger.
B was made by a local baker.
C was very good value.
