DON'T TAKE YOUR RIGHTS FOR GRANTED

1 _____

Campaign groups are pushing for change in many areas of modern life, from environmental issues and ethical consumerism to human and animal rights. It's easy to forget, though, the huge amount of social change that has happened in Britain in the last 200 years. Changes in education, health and housing have helped to shape society as we know it. The roles and rights of women in particular have changed dramatically. Let's look at some of those who helped to make a difference.

2 _____

In 1903, Emmeline Pankhurst founded a campaign group whose members were the first to be called 'suffragettes'. They, with many others, fought hard to win the right for women to vote. The fight for women's rights, however, had started more than 100 years earlier, when Mary Wollstonecraft published a ground-breaking book called A Vindication of the Rights of Women in 1792. In it, she pushed for men and women to be educated equally. She argued that, as well as improving life for women, this would improve society as a whole.

3 _____

In the early 19th century, Elizabeth Fry also fought to improve the lives of women. In 1811, she visited Newgate Prison, in London. She was shocked by the conditions, particularly for the women and their children, who had to stay in prison with their mothers. Elizabeth started a school for these children, and brought food and clothes to them. She also campaigned for prisoners to be treated fairly. In addition, she opened a training school for nurses at Guy's Hospital in London. Her work inspired Florence Nightingale, who took a team of nurses to treat wounded soldiers in the Crimean War.

4 _____

Later in the 19th century, Octavia Hill would also play an important part in improving the lives of some of the poorest people in London. When she was 13, Octavia started work, making toys for very poor children. She was shocked by the poverty she saw around her. As an adult, she worked hard to improve housing conditions. She managed housing projects in very poor parts of London, then trained other women to do it too. Octavia believed that everyone's lives could be improved by art and nature, so she also campaigned for the development of playgrounds and parks.

5 _____

By the end of the 19th century, women had managed to push for better education and employment opportunities, better living and working conditions and better health care. Within 20 years, by 1918, some women would be allowed to vote. At first, this only applied to women who were over 30 and owned some kind of property. But ten years later, in 1928, all women over the age of 21 would finally have the right to vote.

- A Improving the outside environment
- B Helping prisoners to escape
- C The achievements of a hundred years
- D Encouraging better health care
- E Ending poverty
- F Early steps towards equal rights
- G The impact of the past on the present
