READING COMPREHENSION

Instructions: Read the following passage. Choose the best option to each exercise. (12-15).

Over 1500 years ago the ancient Polynesians navigated thousands of miles of open ocean in 60-foot double-hulled sailing canoes without compass and without radar to find the Hawaiian Islands. How could these primitive mariners find these tiny island land spots within the span of the gigantic Pacific Ocean? They completed their mission by studying the flight of birds, the size, shape, and color of the clouds, and the waves, currents, and stars. Despite being labeled a "primitive" society, these Polynesians were quite advanced before they were "discovered" by Captain Cook and "saved" by the Christian missionaries of yesteryear.

(15) Their descendants today populate the beautiful tropical island of Hawaii—a wandering north-to-south chain of volcano chimneys converted to islands—Oahu, Maui, Molokai, Kauai, and the big island, Hawaii. Oahu, the center of the islands and where the capital, Honolulu, is located, is known for its white sand beaches and idyllic sunsets, but it is so much more. Oahu is replete with historical and cultural significance, where with a little digging a visitor can uncover a land rich in legend, lore, and love. Oahu (O'ahu) is known as the "gathering place," although the original meaning of the word has long been lost. In ancient times Oahu's irregular coastline made the creation of fishponds easy. Therefore, there was abundant food, which may be the reason why royalty—"ali'i"—lived there and eventually built the Iolani Palace in 1879. It is the only royal palace on U.S. soil.

(35) The ancient inhabitants of Oahu practiced aquaculture, in which a system of ponds were built by enclosing a natural inlet or bay with coral or rock walls and sand and dirt fill. These walls were built high enough to prevent flooding at high tide and wooden gates were designed to allow fish in but not out. At one time, over 100 ponds existed in Oahu and many are still in evidence today. Because they felt a connection with nature, early Hawaiians considered these fishponds as sacred sites and revered and managed them for productivity for many centuries. These sacred locations are open today as tourist attractions, but they should be treated with respect.

Susan Jones, even as a young girl, loved nature. When she was just 16 years old, she spent several days alone in the forest. This was a carefully planned adventure. She even took along her dog, Precious, for protection. So that her family wouldn't worry, she wrote notes home daily to let them know she was safe and all was well.

Susan certainly found this experience exciting. The sounds of squirrels, owls, and rabbits were the only distraction when she went to sleep. As for food, Susan only ate what this friendly natural environment provided, and there was plenty.

To forever capture this experience, Susan wrote a book. It is called Five Days of Living with the Land and it has proven to be popular with adolescents interested in nature.
