ACTIVITIES

The city of Carlisle and its surrounding countryside offer a wide choice of activities!

Walking – There are several footpaths and tracks that are open to the public. Half of the walking tours have already been made suitable for wheelchair access and next year you can look forward to other newly opened wheelchair-accessible paths. Many of the most popular walking areas can be reached by public transport. Carlisle itself also offers many guided and self-guided city walks – just pick up our City Walks leaflet for details.

Cycling – Carlisle is the centre where the Inverness to Dover route crosses the River Cycle Way. The Eden Valley Cycle Way is perfect for cyclists of all levels – from beginners to experienced cyclists. For full cycling information, please call (01228) 625600.

Bird watching – The Solway Estuary¹ area is a nice place to go bird watching. From spring to autumn, you can watch seagulls by the river and it is worth a visit even in winter when huge flocks of geese can be seen there. To the east of Carlisle, the Geltsdale area has an exciting forest and a huge wildlife area.

Water sports – Talking Tarn Country Park is a great location for sailing, windsurfing and canoeing. You can hire a rowing boat or go for a leisurely walk in the park's woodland. For safety reasons, swimming is forbidden there. It is possible only in the pools in Carlisle, which has 3 heated swimming pools, a waterslide and a magnificent Victorian health suite.

Přečtěte si vyprávění o cestě na Borneo. Na základě informací v textu vyberte k úlohám 40–44 vždy jednu správnou odpověď A–D.

A journey to Borneo

It all started five years ago when I went to Jersey for a 10-day holiday. This island in the English Channel is mostly visited by people who are looking for lazy beach holidays, long walks along the coast and beautiful landscapes. Somebody in the hotel recommended I visit the Durrell Wildlife Park. What really impressed me at the wildlife park were the orang-utans. I remember watching a mother and baby for over an hour – they really are the cutest animals. They looked straight into my eyes and what's more, their games really made me laugh. And that was exactly what I needed and why I chose this island for a holiday – to have a rest from work.

When I got home after ten days, I read all the books I could get and watched TV documentaries about these incredible animals. I did everything I could to learn about them. And then, a few years later, I was looking for a winter holiday somewhere in Scotland when a leaflet from a travel agency came in the mail about watching orang-utans. It wasn't exactly what I expected from a holiday, but the idea of meeting these cute animals again was exciting. Finally, the agency let me spend two weeks with orang-utans in a nursery for orphaned¹ babies at the Sepilok Rehabilitation Centre in Borneo. I completely forgot about Scotland at that moment.

Such an exotic place as Borneo could be a shock for some tourists, but I had seen all those films and TV documentaries about the jungle and the wildlife before, so I knew what to expect. What I wasn't prepared for was the weather. Immediately after landing in Borneo we went in jeeps to our camp. We were staying deep in the jungle, but halfway there we were hit by a monsoon. The road was collapsing, trees were falling down and the bridge we crossed came down just behind us. We had to spend the night in the jungle in the heavy rain with some Polish tourists who couldn't speak a word of English.

The next day, we finally got to the camp and started our work. I was wondering what it was about orang-utans that really caught my heart and finally I found out – it was the first time I held a baby. There was one orphan in the centre who had lost both his parents and was having problems learning to climb trees. His name was Jamil. Every day, I would take him out to a tree and help him practice like his mother would. By the end of the week, little Jamil held his hands out for me to pick him up and screamed – just like a baby would. I had to laugh. The word orang-utan translates as 'man of the forest', which is so true. Sometimes the orang-utans seem so human, although in the wild they can be very dangerous.

My whole life has changed since my trip to Borneo. I was thinking about adopting Jamil and moving him to my hometown, but then I realised that he was happy where he was. So I have begun writing a book about him and other orang-utans and I am planning my second trip to Borneo next year. Until then I will have to learn more about communication with orang-utans, so that I will be able to understand Jamil even better during my next visit to Borneo.
