MAKING THE WORLD A GREENER PLACE: GROW YOUR OWN VEGETABLES!

We meet people from around the world who enjoy growing their own food.

UNITED STATES

When you think of Washington, you might not think of vegetable patches, but there are a lot of them. "Community plots" where people can grow their own food are getting more popular. Brian Wallis, who works in banking, likes gardening in his free time. And he's not alone. "When you work in the city, gardening is a great way to relax," he says.

AUSTRALIA

Outside Sydney there are more than fifty community gardens. In the garden at the Addison Road Centre people grow all kinds of things, from bananas to coffee, herbs, beans and vegetables. They also have lemon, peach and cherry trees. People come here to learn new skills related to organic gardening and recycling.

KENYA

In Kenya, having a piece of land to grow food on is not just a good way to relax, it's a way to earn some extra money. Maxwell shares the land his father gave him with his six brothers. They grow bananas, coffee and sugar on the land, as well as vegetables to eat at home. "Some of the food we eat ourselves," he says, "and some we sell at the market."

RUSSIA

Every weekend in the summer, the roads of Russia's big cities are full of traffic, with families escaping to their "dacha". A "dacha" can be anything from an old shed in a field to a huge house in the countryside, but the reason they go is the same. People from the city can enjoy the fresh air and grow some vegetables. Tatiana, who has a lot near the Black Sea, grows tomatoes and cucumbers in the summer and cabbage in the winter. "It always tastes much better when you grow it yourself," she says.

1. Why does Brian Wallis think people enjoy gardening?

He thinks it is cheaper than going to the supermarket.

He thinks it helps people who work in the city to relax.

He thinks it teaches you new skills.

2. What can people learn at the Addison Road Centre, outside Sydney?

They can learn about organic gardening and recycling.

They can learn about different types of fruit.

They can learn about how to relax.

3. How did Maxwell get his land?

His uncle gave it to him.

His grandfather gave it to him.

His father gave it to him.

4. What do Maxwell and his brothers do with the food they grow?

They eat it all.

They eat some of it, and sell some at the market.

They sell it all at the market.

5. What is a "dacha" in Russia?

It's a house in the country (sometimes it's a very small house).

It's a piece of land.

It's a type of vegetable.
