Dear Maggie,

I've always been a film fan and watching films on the big screen is one of my favourite activities! I love all types of film; from horror to romantic comedy, from modern animations to black-and-white Hollywood classics. (1) ____ I know 3D films are not new. Directors have been experimenting with the format for a very long time. My mother has told me about her experiences in the mid-20th century of going to see Jaws 3-D. (2) ____ So, the technology has been around for a while. But it wasn't really until 2009 when Up was released, astonishing millions of cinema-goers with its magical depth, that people started to take notice. (3) ____ Now it seems that 3D is going to be a permanent part of the film-going experience. However, I'm not sure whether this is going to be a good or a bad thing.

I'm glad that my first 3D experience was Alice in Wonderland, as it showed me both good and not so good aspects of using 3D. I went into the cinema with a great sense of expectation. It has always been one of my favourite books and I knew that the crazy world she finds herself in after falling down the rabbit hole would be ideal for 3D effects. I was right – the special effects created incredible surrealistic illusions! (4) ____ However, a large part of the film, particularly at the beginning, took place above ground. The screenwriter had extended Lewis Carroll's story a little to look at Alice's real life as a young teenager. Here I felt the 3D was completely unnecessary, and it actually distracted me. It didn't make the people seem more real to me, but less real. The colours were also dull and I kept taking off my glasses to see if the sky really was that colour. (5) ____

I'm definitely in favour of 3D in animations, but I have yet to be convinced that it is good for other types of film. However, I know that there are a lot of people who would disagree with me!

Davina Henshaw from Dudley

- A This was followed shortly by the award-winning Avatar, and a real 3D revolution in the film industry took off.
- B The colours were brilliant, and I loved the whole experience!
- C It won't be long before everyone has 3D television.
- D Apparently, she had to wear strange cardboard spectacles with red and green lenses!
- E Of course, that allowed me to see the true blue of the sky, but not a lot else!!
- F However, I had never seen a 3D film until I went to see Alice in Wonderland starring Johnny Depp.
