Water Mix-up by Robert Richardson

Last year I went to Malaysia on business. My hosts were very friendly and most evenings they took me to different restaurants and ordered food for me. However, one evening I went out alone. I wanted to try the local food. I found a restaurant with a wonderful aroma of spicy food so I decided to try it. Of course, the menu was all written in Malaysian and I didn't understand anything.

The man at the next table was eating something interesting. I called the waiter, pointed, and made eating gestures to show that I wanted the same thing. The waiter and the man at the next table laughed and I felt happy. The waiter brought me the food, a fruit juice and a bowl of water.

The meal was excellent. The man next to me was eating with his right hand, so I did the same. When I needed to wash my fingers, I used the small bowl of water. Immediately the waiter came and brought me a new water bowl. This happened several times. When it happened for the fifth time, he put the bowl on my table with a bang.

I noticed that the man at the next table wasn't using the water to wash his fingers – he was drinking it. I felt very stupid. I was sorry that the waiter was angry, but I didn't know how to say that. I gave him some extra money when I paid for my meal.
