Inspiring teens – four young people who we can admire.

Kuha'o Case was born two months early and has been blind all his life. When he was twelve, he started to learn to play the piano. His family didn't have one so he didn't have much time to practise. He soon found that he had a very special talent. He could play almost any tune he heard. He has now made a CD – and he owns his own piano!

Jessica Watson was born in 1993 in Australia. She had sailing lessons when she was young and her family even lived on a boat for five years. It was no surprise when she decided to sail around the world. She sailed alone and didn't stop anywhere or get any help during the journey. When she arrived home after seven months at sea, it was three days before her seventeenth birthday.

Dawn Loggins had a very difficult childhood. Her family were very poor and they even became homeless at one time. Dawn didn't let their problems stop her from studying, though, and she did very well at school. After she had finished High School, she applied to a few local universities as well as Harvard. Harvard accepted her and also agreed to pay for her studies and accommodation.

Ashley Ogilvie and Ailish Bolt are two teenagers from Australia. They shared an interest in the environment and decided to set up a website together. Planet You has become very popular and teaches young people how they can help the planet. In its first two years, it also raised $30,000 AUS for environmental causes.
