ALLESANDRO BENETTON

Benetton is a family business. My father started the company, Italy's largest clothing manufacturer, forty years ago and we now have around 5,000 shops selling Benetton clothes in 120 countries worldwide. I recently took over as chairman and I want the business to grow, but I also want to keep the values that have made Benetton an international name.

Having three children means it's not necessary for me to set the alarm clock. I live very near my office so I can be there in five minutes and as soon as I sit at my desk I get to work. Time is valuable and there isn't usually enough to get through everything that needs to be done. My job is quite varied – it's not all about clothes. At the moment, we are developing charity projects in Africa and helping the UN World Food Programme – we need to listen to the people the world has ignored.

When I was growing up, my parents made sure I was able to look after myself and I want to raise my children in the same way. I don't treat them as children, I treat them as adults. They can be childish if they want, but they need to take responsibility for the things they do and the choices they make. I would love to be with my children more, but my job is very demanding. That's why the time I get to spend with my family is extremely valuable to me.
