Just three years after it was first announced, one  Dubai's grandest projects - the Dubai Water Canal - opened in November 2016. The project turns Bur Dubai  an island in the middle of the city, linking Business Bay and the Creek with the Arabian Gulf.

The developers believe  the canal will attract millions of visitors each year. Tourist and business activities in surrounding areas will increase, and anyone owing land or a house near the canal can expect  to rise in value.

Water flowing through the canal  improve the quality of water of all the waterways (Creek, Business Bay and the Water Canal). Moreover, the canal will also help  lower the temperature in the city.

Built by over 4,600 workers, the canal will  improve transport links in the city. Visitors will now be able to take a boat from the old Gold Souk in Deira all the way up  creek to Business Bay, or travel  Jumeirah to Bur Dubai.

Along the canal, footpaths, running tracks, and parks will allow locals and visitors a chance to walk  enjoy the canal's waterfalls, bridges, and traffic.

Before long, film companies started to build _____ new studios in an area called Hollywood, at the foot of some small dry hills. Movies are expensive to make.
