Social networking sites offer important (sites – opportunities – places) to connect with all sorts of people, especially if your goal is to (promote – give – talk) a new product or (start-up – product – thing). To make the most of these (platforms – places – products), you have to be just as careful with the (picture – image – photo) you present as you (is – am – are) with your products or business. This is not only true if you're trying to promote a product, but also if you are looking for work. In fact, did you know that what you (post – draw – look) on social media sites today could (give – affect – increase) your chances of finding a job in the future? Some companies don't just stop at the (CVs – TVs – ACs) that they receive, but they also (looks – look – looking) at a jobseeker's behavior on social networking sites, mainly because what we say and do online may not always correspond to the person we describe in our CVs.
