1 "No one listens to old people," says Maria Amelia López on her blog. But she was wrong. A lot of people listened to her. When she died, aged ninety-seven, López was thought to be the world's oldest blogger, and she was certainly one of the most successful. Her first post was made on her ninety-fifth birthday. It read, "Today it's my birthday, and my grandson, who is very stingy, gave me a blog."

2 A later post reads, "Since that day, I've had 1,570,784 visits from bloggers from five continents who have cheered up my old age." From cleaning ladies in Brazil to the Spanish president, people have enjoyed reading what López had to say. She was funny and friendly, and she had some strong opinions. "Old people need to wake up a bit," she said. "You have to live life. Don't take pills and fall asleep in the armchair."

3 At first, López didn't know anything about computers. "I thought a blog was a kind of paper notebook," she said. But her grandson, Daniel, who she lived with, set up a blog for her as a birthday present. At the time, he had no idea how it would change their lives. López received hundreds of emails, many in languages she didn't understand. Although she had other helpers, including Daniel, and friends she met on the Internet, she couldn't reply to everyone.

4 When she was on her own, López loved reading the online newspapers and chatting on the Internet. She said it helped her to keep in touch with the younger generation. Teenagers wrote to López to tell her about their lives and ask her for advice. She thought that everybody should use the Internet. For López, it was one of the best experiences of her life.
