There a lot more to magic at Hogwarts. They to study the night skies through their telescopes every Wednesday at midnight and learn the names of different stars and the movements of the planets. Three times a week they out to the greenhouses behind the castle to study Herbology, with a called Professor Sprout, where they how to take care of all the strange plants and fungi and out what they were used for. Easily the most boring lesson History of Magic, which the only class taught by a ghost. Professor Binns had been very old indeed when he had fallen asleep in front of the staff-room fire and got up next morning to teach, leaving his body behind him. Professor Flitwick, the Charms teacher, a tiny little wizard who had to stand on a pile of books to see over his desk. At the start of their first lesson he took the register, and when he reached Harry's name he couldn't close his mouth because of the surprise. Professor McGonagall strict and clever. 'Transfiguration is some of the most complex and dangerous magic you will learn at Hogwarts,' she . 'Anyone messing around in my class will leave and not come back. You have been warned.' Then she changed her desk into a pig and back again. They all very impressed and couldn't wait to get started, but soon realised they weren't going to be changing the furniture into animals for a long time. After making a lot of complicated notes, they each given a match and trying to turn it into a needle. By the end of the lesson, only Hermione Granger had made any difference to her match; Professor McGonagall the class how it had gone all silver and pointy and gave Hermione a rare smile.

His turban, he told them, had been given to him by an African prince as a thank-you for getting rid of a troublesome zombie, but they didn't believe this story. For one thing, when Seamus Finnigan asked to hear how Quirrell had fought off the zombie, Quirrell went pink and started talking about the weather; for another, they had noticed that a funny smell came from the turban, and the Weasley twins insisted that it was stuffed full of garlic as well, so that Quirrell was protected wherever he went. Harry was very relieved to find out that he wasn't miles behind everyone else. Lots of people had come from Muggle families and, like him, hadn't had any idea that they were witches and wizards. There was so much to learn that even people like Ron didn't have much of a head start.
