When Tony was a little boy he wanted to become a police officer. He thought police officers were kind because they helped people, but at the same time they were brave because they fought against criminals. He also loved their uniform. Later, when Tony went to high school, he changed his mind, and he wanted to become a veterinarian. He thought vets were important to take good care of animals, but, unfortunately, he realized he was allergic to some animals. Now that he has finished high school, he is still looking for the best profession for himself.
