Buildering

1 Many people have an appetite for climbing. For some, however, the ultimate goal is to climb buildings, not mountains. Buildering is the act of climbing on the outside of buildings, such as skyscrapers. It is named after bouldering, which is a style of rock climbing. It is a dangerous activity that has caught the attention of both climbers and the police.

The Sport

2 Buildering is usually done alone. A single climber will choose a building to climb, usually a tall building in a major city like London, New York, or Taipei. Climbers prepare for their climb by deciding the best route to take up the structure. They must also figure out what kind of equipment they will need. It often includes items such as ropes and bodysuits. Sometimes, however, they climb “free,” with no ropes at all.

The Dangers

3 Not surprisingly, buildering is a very dangerous sport. Climbers put their lives at risk every time they go up the side of a building. They are also at risk of being arrested by the police. Climbing on the outsides of buildings is illegal. They are considered private property. The police often wait for the climber to come back down. Then they arrest the climber for breaking the law. For this reason, many climbers choose to climb at night so that they do not get caught.

Famous Climbers

4 Buildering may sound like a modern sport, but it has actually been around for more than a hundred years. In the 1890s, Geoffrey Winthrop Young, a student at Cambridge University in England, used to participate in “roof climbing.” He even wrote a climbing guide for some of the buildings at the university. After Young, other students followed, though most performed their risky acts at night.

5 Today, the sport is made most famous by French climber, Alain Robert. Known as the “French Spider-Man,” Robert has climbed some of the world’s tallest skyscrapers. Some of them include the Eiffel Tower in Paris and the Petronas Towers in Malaysia. (He was arrested twice at the 60th floor of the Petronas Towers.) Robert is somewhat of a celebrity. He enjoys the crowds of people who watch him conquer the tallest buildings of the world—one skyscraper at a time.
