The Painting

A new painting was hanging in the Hemlock Mills Art Gallery. Throughout the day, visitors stood before the new exhibit and made comments about what it _____ represent.

"It looks _____ a terrifying monster," said Misty. "There's no name on it, but I'm sure a famous artist drew it. I've _____ seen his paintings in other exhibitions! I can recognize his style but I can't remember his name now."

"It _____ be a picture of a park as seen from an airplane," thought James. "I see many trees and roads."

"Both of you are wrong," said Allison. "I think you _____ look at the colours. It's definitely a picture of the universe. You can clearly see the planets and the stars, _____ you?"

Miss Culture, the local art critic for the Hemlock Weekly News, said. "This is clearly a masterpiece created by an artist who wants to be anonymous at this stage of his or her career."

At that moment, Mr. Lightman, the gallery owner, entered the room. "Isn't it great?" he asked with a big smile on his face. "My three-year-old did that this morning. He says it's a zoo. We _____ to show him paintings of great artists when he was a baby and now ... Look at that! I'm so proud _____ my little boy! And he hasn't had any painting lessons _____. Imagine what he will be _____ to do after that!"
