Some people go out of their way to make travel convenient and comfortable. Dervla Murphy doesn't go out of her way. Since she began writing, Murphy has shown a passion for travelling in an eccentric way. Luckily for us, she is also keen to share her passion for travelling with us in her writing. Her first book, Full Tilt, describes her journey from Ireland to India with a bicycle. This was a journey which she had been planning since she was ten years old. Where other travellers might not have attracted so much attention, Murphy, being a lone woman travelling on a bicycle, attracted a lot of attention. She took a revolver for protection and had to use the revolver twice: once to scare off wolves in Bulgaria and once to scare off people in Persia. To tell a story in an interesting way is one thing, but to tell a story in such a humorous and good-natured way is another. As an example of good travel writing, I can't think of a better example.
