- 4) This speaker tells how a certain radical change turned skating into a sport.
- 5) This speaker explains why people skate nowadays.

Speaker A

Many millions of people skate in those parts of the world where the winters are cold enough. Although most people ice-skate for recreation and exercise, skating for form and speed is also a highly competitive international sport. Ice-skating skills are an important part of the game of ice hockey. Ice-skating shows entertain millions of spectators. The increasing number of indoor rinks has made year-round skating possible.

Speaker B

People probably skated on ice in the Scandinavian countries before the Christian era. It's quite possible that the first skates were sharp parts of animal bone fitted to the bottom of boots to ease travel over ice. Some drawings and references in literature to ice-skating date from the Middle Ages. The modern word skate is derived from the Dutch word schaats, meaning "leg bone".

Speaker C

Skating as a sport developed on the lakes of Scotland and the canals of the Netherlands. In the 13th and 14th centuries they began to use wood instead of bone in skate blades. In 1572 the first iron skates were manufactured. The iron blades enabled the skater to push himself or herself ahead much faster. Instructional books were published, and the first skate club was founded in Edinburgh in 1742.

Speaker D

Ice-skating did not develop as an organized competitive sport until the introduction of steel skate blades permanently fixed to leather boots. (Before that steel blades were tied with straps to street boots.) After the innovations in skate construction, both figure skating and speed skating found their way to sports competitions. Figure skating became an Olympic event in 1908. Speed skating for men was part of 1924 Olympic Games, but it was not until 1960 that women's speed skating was put on the Olympic agenda.
