Hello, my name is Yusuf and I'm going to tell you about cocoa. I know a lot about cocoa because my family grows cocoa trees.

Cocoa trees are small and we plant them under banana trees to protect them from the sun and the wind. The fruits - the cocoa pods- grow from the trunk of the cocoa tree.

From October to December we harvest the cocoa. We cut the pods from the tree with very long knives. Mum and Dad cut down the pods and I pick them up.

Then, we all sit around cutting the pods open and pulling out the pulp and beans with our hands. Sometimes we eat a pod. We eat the pulp and spit the beans out. It's delicious: sweet and juicy.

We put all the pulp and beans on banana leaves on the ground and put more leaves on top of them until all the beans are covered. We leave them there for 5 or 6 days.

The pulp becomes liquid and it runs out leaving only the wet beans. We use that juice to make cocoa liquor, but I never drink it, it's for Mum and Dad and the grownups.

Then, we spread the wet beans on mats to dry in the sun. We have to turn them frequently to make sure they dry well. They are ready in about two weeks. I like it when the beans are drying; the whole village smells nice.

And finally, we put the beans in big sacks and take them to the market to sell. With the money, we buy clothes and food for the year. I know they make chocolate with our cocoa beans but we don't eat it. They make chocolate in other countries and it's so expensive to buy here.
