My Thoughts about Facebook

Everything in the world has good and bad aspects, and that can definitely be said for Facebook. Our lives have been taken over by this long running trend, one that has lasted longer than any of us could have possibly predicted.

And let's be honest, what's not to love? People of all ages can chat with their friends and family from all around the world. Those who are able to find their old friends and make new ones on this networking site feel it serves them in the coolest way ever. Still, everything comes at a cost. Is Facebook a valuable communication platform beneficial to all its users, or merely a time waster causing more headaches than happiness? For the average, sociable seventeen-year-olds, they are more in favour of its value as a communication tool.

There are advantages of having Facebook. The ease of communication is the obvious one. Who could have possibly imagined that someone would create a space where we could communicate, share photos and keep up-to-date with our friends from all over the globe as long as we had access to an internet connection? It has also become a platform upon which teenagers can express their feelings and voice their opinions, knowing that they will actually be heard, if not by adults, certainly by their peers. Whether they want to share their feelings with the world, or merely their closest friends, Facebook makes either possible.

Unfortunately, some users are not aware of their actions on Facebook are inappropriate. Posting unwelcomed comments on others' updates and taking a peek at others' walls can cause arguments and enrage others. Updating too much personal information may tempt scammers, strangers and spammers into doing harm to them. These scammers are always on the lookout for potential victims. So, Facebook users should draw a line between personal and public matters on Facebook.

However, Facebook can be used productively for fruitful activities. There are many educational pages for students and programmes others can venture into to acquire language skills.

True Value of Money

Everyone who pays for a product or service is a customer. As customers, people have their own opinions with every goods or service received. (25)  The money is well spent when they feel that they have received an item that was worth the price they paid. This is influenced by consumers' decision, including price, quality and product or service suitability.

However, do they reflect on what they have purchased and how it would benefit others? Value for money also means that the customers' family and friends should benefit and share the value. (26)

(27) . It could be only you and your father would eat it because the others want fried noodles. Thus, it would have been better if you had bought nasi lemak and fried noodles so everyone could enjoy the food and nothing get wasted. (28)  A racquet or a set of board game will enable your siblings to spend time with their friends. That's value for money, or in other words, money well spent.

(29)  They may not be tangible, direct or obvious but may involve bringing positive benefits like ensuring good health clean environment and security. Besides, thinking thoroughly before making a purchase would increase your critical and creative skills.

A	So, they should be smart in spending their money to make sure the benefits are equally shared without wastage.
B	Value for money depends on your ultimate goal — the benefits you hope to gain.
C	It is normal for them to expect that they are getting value for money spent
D	When you see an item that you want, you need to decide whether to buy it or not.
E	When buying gifts for your younger siblings, get them something they can enjoy or use with their friends.
F	Making a wise decision before spending helps ensure we get value for money and it brings benefits to others, yourself and the surroundings.
G	For example, when you buy nasi lemak for yourself and your family.
H	The items that you buy may arrive late at your home.
