Transportation in Costa Rica The best way for you to get around Costa Rica depends on a lot of things. Some of them are listed below, and you can keep them in mind while travelling.

1. The length of time you have to travel. Shorter visits might benefit from the convenience of domestic air travel and rental cars. If you are staying longer, you can afford to trade time for cheaper and usually more interesting modes of transport.
2. The number of people you are travelling with. The more people you are travelling with, the more ways you can split the cost of a rental car or chartering a small plane.
3. The amount of money you have to spend. Even if money is no object, you should ride the bus at least once for the experience.
4. How attached you are to convenience. If you want to leave when you want, make restroom stops when you want and pull off the road to take pictures then consider a rental car or a bicycle.
5. How dispersed the places are. As small as Costa Rica is, you might think you could see the whole country in one afternoon. However, there are no freeways, most roads are one lane each way, and the few four lane highways are concentrated in the central valley and often full of traffic.
