IX. Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C or D to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions.

There are already many, many people who have passed the landmark age of 100. In fact, there are now so many healthy, elderly people that there's a new term for them: the welllderly. These are people over the age of 80 who have no diseases such as high blood pressure, heart disease or diabetes and have never taken medicines for these conditions.

There have been many scientific studies of communities where a healthy old age is typical. These include places like Calabria in southern Italy and the island of Okinawa in Japan.

The small village of Molochio in Calabria has about 2,000 inhabitants. And of these there are at least eight centenarians. When researchers ask people like this the secret of their long life, the answer is almost always to do with diet and is almost always the same: 'I eat a lot of fruit and vegetables.' 'A little bit, but of everything.' 'No smoking, no drinking.'

While in the past scientists have looked at things such as diet and lifestyle for an explanation of long life, these days they are investigating genetics. One such researcher is Eric Topol, who says, "There must be genes that explain why these individuals are protected from the aging process."

The new research into long life looks at groups of people who have a genetic connection. For example, one group of interest lives in Ecuador. In one area of the country there are a number of people with the same genetic condition. It's called Laron syndrome. The condition means that they don't grow to more than about one metre, but it also seems to give them protection against cancer and diabetes. As a result, they live longer than other people in their families. Meanwhile, on the Hawaiian island of Oahu, there's another group of long-lived men, Japanese-Americans. They have a similar gene to the Laron syndrome group.

Back in Calabria, scientists are trying to work out exactly how much of the longevity is due to genetics and how much to environment. By checking public records going back to the 19th century, researchers have reconstructed the family trees of 202 nonagenarians and centenarians. They concluded that there were genetic factors involved.

31. Diabetes, heart disease and high blood pressure ____.
- A. are common illnesses in elderly people
 - B. teach scientists a lot about old age and long life
 - C. are never found among a group of people in Ecuador
 - D. have been scientifically proved to be the signs of aging
32. What do some people from Calabria and Okinawa have in common?
- A. They suffer from diabetes.
 - B. They have an unusual genetic illness.
 - C. They live long and healthy lives.
 - D. They originated from the same ancestors.
33. According to the article, ____.
- A. scientists are investigating people who are 120 years old
 - B. scientific advances mean we will all live to at least 100 years
 - C. scientists have found genes that might influence how long we live
 - D. scientists have concluded environment is the decisive factor of longevity
34. The 'welllderly' ____.
- A. need medicine for typical illnesses of old age
 - B. are over 80 years old and in good health
 - C. are elderly people with health problems
 - D. have both health and wealth
35. Laron syndrome is interesting to scientists because ____.
- A. it might help people with growth problems
 - B. it shows that there is a genetic reason for old age
 - C. there are different versions of the syndrome
 - D. it is related to taking investigation into some family trees
36. Healthy elderly people ____.
- A. often say that their diet is the most important thing
 - B. don't usually know what the secret to long life is
 - C. give many different reasons for their old age
 - D. agree that their genes protect them from aging

X. Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C or D to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions.

In 1903 the members of the governing board of the University of Washington in Seattle engaged a firm of landscape architects, specialists in the design of outdoor environments - Olmsted Brothers of Brookline, Massachusetts - to advise them on an appropriate layout for the university grounds. The plan impressed the university officials, and in time many of its recommendations were implemented. City officials in Seattle, the largest city in the northwestern United States, were also impressed, for they employed the same organization to study Seattle's public park needs. John Olmsted did the investigation and subsequent report on Seattle's parks. He and his brothers believed that parks should be adapted to the local topography, utilize the area's trees and shrubs, and be available to the entire community. They especially emphasized the need for natural, serene settings where hurried urban dwellers could periodically escape from the city. The essence of the Olmsted park plan was to develop a continuous driveway, twenty miles long, that would tie together a whole series of parks, playgrounds, and parkways. There would be local parks and squares too, but all of this was meant to supplement the major driveway, which was to remain the unifying factor for the entire system.

In November of 1903 the city council of Seattle adopted the Olmsted Report, and it automatically became the master plan for the city's park system. Prior to this report, Seattle's park development was very limited and funding meager. All this changed after the report. Between 1907 and 1913, city voters approved special funding measures amounting to $4,000,000. With such unparalleled sums at their disposal, with the Olmsted guidelines to follow, and with the added incentive of wanting to have the city at its best for the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition of 1909, the Parks Board bought aggressively. By 1913 Seattle had 25 parks amounting to 1,400 acres, as well as 400 acres in playgrounds, pathways, boulevards, and triangles. More lands would be added in the future, but for all practical purposes it was the great land surge of 1907-1913 that established Seattle's park system.

37. What does the passage mainly discuss?
- A. The planned development of Seattle's public park system
 - B. The organization of the Seattle city government
 - C. The history of the Olmsted Brothers architectural firm
 - D. The design and building of the University of Washington campus
