When the slipper fit perfectly on Cinderella's foot, the prince knew that she was the lady whom he had fallen in love with.

She turned a pumpkin into a coach, mice into horses, a rat into a coachman, and lizards into footmen.

They married and lived happily ever after.

A long time ago, Cinderella lived with her father, stepmother and two stepsisters in the countryside. Her stepmother was unkind and selfish. After her father died, she made Cinderella do all the housework. She and her two daughters spent most of the money left by her husband.

Cinderella was very sad and cried. Her fairy godmother appeared and helped her.

When the clock struck twelve, Cinderella ran away from the castle in a hurry and left one of her glass slippers behind.

One day the Prince invited all the young ladies in the country to a ball so that he could choose a wife.

The two stepsisters were invited and Cinderella wanted to go too, but they said that a maid could never attend a ball.

She then turned Cinderella's rags into a beautiful gown, and gave her a pair of glass slippers. The Godmother warned her that she must return before twelve because the spells would be broken by midnight.

The Prince fell in love with Cinderella at the ball and danced with her throughout the night.

The Prince decided to find and marry the lady to whom the slipper belonged.

The Prince asked all the young ladies in the country to try on the slipper but it did not fit any of their feet.
