SET 1

PART 3

You are going to read an extract from an article. For question 19 to 26, choose the correct answer (A, B, C or D) and mark the correct letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet.

Facebook was launched on 4 February 2004 and only students at Harvard University had access to it initially. However due to overwhelming response, it expanded to colleges around Boston and then to various Ivy League colleges. Founded by undergraduate Mark Zuckerberg in 2003, Facebook is one of the most popular social networking in today's times. Today, Facebook has over 2.5 billion users worldwide. If it was a country, Facebook would be the world's largest country by population, around twice the size of China. Out of 4 people, at least 1 person who browses the Internet not only has a Facebook account but has returned to the site within the next hour.

This networking giant is the third most used website in the world after Google and Youtube and has an online traffic of about 25.5 billion across the world. This website is not only a platform for networking but is also useful in bettering education, making news more accessible, advertising and promoting businesses. Because of the variety of applications provided by this network, it has almost become ubiquitous. It is said that of all the Web's great superpowers – YouTube that keeps us entertained, Google which helps us search for data and information while Microsoft has made it easy for everyone to use computers – one huge advantage that Facebook has over those other sites is the emotional connection of its user.

It is undeniable that there are so many of us who are comfortable living so much of our life on Facebook. This represents a tremendous cultural shift. 72.8% of Facebook users are within the 18-44 years old range. They are Facebook's fastest growing demographic. Facebook makes it all possible – we are more accustomed to openness, our lifestyle is changing. However this social network platform is a contradiction at times. Facebook is filled with the cherished memories of its users. You can celebrate your loved one's birthday, your child's first steps or mourn and grieve the passing of a friend – however the network makes money because you are posting those important moments online. The feelings you experience on Facebook are heartfelt and personal; the data you are providing however makes money for the platform.

Besides being a medium to interact and communicate, Facebook has become a marketing platform for many popular brands. Today, one can easily access all the famous global brands on Facebook. Several small time businesses have become successful on Facebook. People who do not have the capital to open a store have launched their products on Facebook, gaining financial success and recognition. One can buy practically anything on Facebook from shoes, bags, accessories, clothes, phones, laptops, electronic etc. Many of these online stores offer the facility to make online payments and deliver goods to the buyer's home.

Facebook's tagline is '... helps to connect and share with people in your life.' This is the primary mission of the network – to make the world more accessible and connected. Expanding Facebook's function from enabling us to interact with people we like on the network, to interacting with stuff our friends like on other network is a 'natural extension' of what the company has been doing.

Facebook has become a kind of virtual pacemaker, setting the rhythms of our online lives, either by socialising or the serious career networking. Zuckerberg's next goal is even more ambitious: to make Facebook a kind of second nervous system that is rapid-firing more of our thoughts and feelings over the web.
