THE APPLE TREE

Once there was an old apple tree in a farmer's garden. It was so old that it had stopped bearing fruit for a long time. The only purpose <sup>1</sup>it served was to provide shelter to the sparrows, grasshoppers and squirrels in the neighborhood.

One day, the farmer decided to cut down the tree down. <sup>2</sup>He felt it had become completely useless. Besides, he wanted to get some furniture made and what better way to use the wood supply from the tree. The wood was still strong. So taking a sharp axe in his hand, the farmer chopped at the roots of the tree. At once there was great shock among the many creatures who inhabited the tree. The grasshoppers, the sparrows and the squirrels came out of their dwelling places and hung around the farmer. "Please...sir", <sup>3</sup>they begged him. "Spare this tree's life. It is our only home." But the farmer only chopped harder at the roots. "We promise to sing to you in the afternoon when you work hard. It would lighten your work." pleaded the birds. But their cries were in vain. The farmer continued his task with single-minded concentration. He was in a hurry to finish off the chopping by that afternoon. As he raised his axe one more time, something in the hollow of the tree caught his eyes. It was a beehive. Upon looking closer, the farmer found that <sup>4</sup>it was full of honey. He tasted the honey. It was so heavenly.

Suddenly, the farmer realized that the tree was not so useless after all. Its hollow was the ideal place for a beehive to rest. And if he took away the honey now, the bees would make more. <sup>5</sup>They would certainly not abandon such an attractive home.

"Hey...! You up there!" he yelled out as he threw away the axe. "I'm sparing the life of this tree. You can live in peace now."

The sparrows, the grasshoppers and the squirrels breathed deep sighs of relief. What a blessing that the farmer had found something of use to him in the tree! After all, it was the only reason the tree was still standing.
