Dear Diary,

One time, during a dinner out, my mum and my aunt got into a huge fight over the latter's spending habits. My mum protested by leaving the restaurant and lying down in the middle of traffic. Everyone immediately rushed outside. My dad was convincing her to get off the road, I was redirecting cars and my uncle was trying to calm the gathering crowd behind us.

After my aunt apologised and my mum agreed to get up, we suddenly realised that my younger brother was missing. Ten minutes later, we finally found him crouching behind a large garbage bin. When asked why he was hiding, he said, 'I don't want to end up on YouTube.'

Mum,

Dad called while you were out. Said he and Hanis will be late. Hanis needs a new set of geometrical instruments.

Murdered father leaves behind wife and 3 children

Children who have a secure foundation with their parents are more successful than those who do not, regardless of socioeconomic status. That doesn't mean you have to take them to Disney World or to the movies every week, but you'd do well to read a book together at bedtime, share meals whenever possible and generally make yourself available when they need you. By nurturing a strong bond with your children from birth, you'll help them feel grounded and secure. Secure children are more likely to become successful adults.
