Reading Comprehension

Hi, I'm Stephen. I'm excited because today my company is taking us on a fun trip downtown to participate in Toronto's 44th Annual Cake-Making Contest. The aim of this event is to bake and decorate a cake in one hour. There's only one problem: I've never baked before, so it's going to be a challenge. I'm anxious about how it will turn out, but they give you instructions to follow, so there's a chance I can win. I decided to practice last night, but while I was reading the recipe, I reached for the bowl of cake batter, and it spilled all over the floor. Instead of baking, I spent an hour cleaning up the mess! This morning, I was talking to my colleague Aiden about the contest because he'd participated in it last year. When he told me that he'd made a triple-chocolate cake with strawberries on top, I couldn't believe it. He said he'd been planning the cake for weeks beforehand, and he was very happy it had won. I was surprised because he doesn't seem like a baker! He says he's confident he'll win again this year. I think maybe he's forgetting one very important part of the contest, though—the hardest part is being creative! I hope I have a chance to win!
