Captain returned to prison to escape

On 24 August 1914, during World War 1, Captain Robert Campbell of the British Army's 1st Battalion East Surrey Regiment was captured while serving on the front line.

He was taken to a for prisoners-of-war in Magdeburg, Germany. During his time there, he a letter saying that his mother was dying of cancer. Wishing to see his mother one last time before she died, Campbell wrote a touching the German Kaiser.

Surprisingly, the Kaiser his request - as long as Robert Campbell returned. Campbell gave his and returned to the UK - likely through the Netherlands. There he time with his dying mother, who died in February 1917.

After her death, he kept his and came back. Most surprisingly, however, is that Campbell then tried to soon after his return.

Unfortunately, no other British in German captivity were shown compassion of this sort, after the British a similar request from a German prisoner-of-war called Peter Gastreich.
