XI. Read and choose the correct answer

Marriage and family are very important in Viet Nam. In the countryside, parents often arrange marriages; divorce remains uncommon, though is more frequent in cities. In traditional Vietnamese families, roles are fixed. The man of the house is responsible for supporting the family's budget. Older children help to look after younger siblings. The woman of the house looks after her parents, husband and children. In rural areas, women also do much agricultural work. Vietnamese women live by the "four virtues": hard work, beauty, refined speech and excellent conduct.

The Vietnamese attach great importance to two traditional family responsibilities: to care for their parents in their old age and to worship them after death. In each Vietnamese family, there is at least one altar on which there are the pictures of their ancestors. Family members worship their ancestors because they think parents after death will go to live in another world and this altar is the place where the ancestors' souls live in. Therefore, every day Vietnamese people lay flowers or sometimes fruits on the altar for the belief that those ancestors will enjoy them.
