Correct one mistake in each sentence.

1. Yesterday I atended the best time-management traning of those I'd ever gone to.

2. The speakers and content of the online conference was really awsome.

3. This reception in the open air was really something I needed - I was able to calm down and recharge my battery.

4. Kylie is an extraordinary manager, she stands out of all the rest we had during the crisis years.

5. I've signed in for the training next Monday, though I'm not sure if it's applied 100% to what I do now.

6. The new equipment instructor was very friendly and his explanations were easy to pursue.

7. I'm so glad I finally completed the course of webinars and received my certificate of attending!

8. Probably Julian got stucked in a rut and just cannot see the big picture.

LIVEWORKSHEETS