SITUATIONAL WRITING: SPEECH

Model speech

Farewell speech

Mr Johnson and friends, let me begin my speech with my sincere gratitude to all of you for your presence. However, I feel really unhappy to tell you that a very well known figure from our school is leaving us this Friday.

Adam, do you know him? Well, who does not? Mr Johnson and all my respected fellows, Adam is amidst these last days which he is spending with us. He will be leaving us this Friday for Manchester, England. Anyways I know none of us should actually be sad for Adam moving overseas. It will be just a physical day to day connection that would be missing, but we all will be virtually connected way too strong. Adam would be living in a strong long-distance friendship.

As you all know, we only have three months left before we pass out from School. Adam is indeed a very intelligent student. He had planned to join his father in Manchester and continue his further studies. I believe all of you would be praying for the best of Adam's future so do all of us.

Whether it is Adam's academic efficiency that we would miss but his excellence in co-curricular activities is also leaving us with much to debate.

I thank you all and especially Adam to give me your precious time and listen to me attentively. Umm well, that's what I have to say. Thank you all once again and I would conclude my words by saying:
"Great friends are hard to find, difficult to leave, impossible to forget."
