Part 7 Reading Comprehension*Questions 19–23 refer to the following article.*

When you bring in a new employee, it is important to make sure that he or she understands the usual office procedures as well as the codes of behavior. These things should be outlined clearly in the employee handbook. New employees should understand that they are expected to do more than just glimpse at the handbook and then hide it in a drawer. A thorough reading of it will help them understand many things they need to know about the workplace culture. Employees also appreciate verbal reinforcement. Supervisors should let them know when they have completed a job well, or if they are bending the rules too far. More experienced coworkers can be asked to support new employees while they are getting used to their new positions and explain procedures to them, but ultimately it is the supervisor's responsibility to make sure that the normal office practices are carried out. When everyone understands what is expected, then the office procedures run more smoothly. In fact, it is not a bad idea to review the codes and procedures with the entire staff from time to time. This can be done on a regular basis at staff meetings, or it can be part of a training session.

19. What should new employees do with the handbook?

- Read it quickly.
- Study it completely.
- Hide it in a drawer.
- Share it with coworkers.

20. What should the supervisor do when an employee breaks a rule?

- Punish her.
- Fire her.
- Tell her.
- Retrain her.

21. How can experienced coworkers help new employees?

- By writing a new handbook.
- By explaining office procedures.
- By inviting them to staff meetings.
- By telling the supervisor when a rule has been broken.
