Fridges are becoming clever. With 1_____ internet connection and 2_____ computer, fridges know how much food you have got and how much you need. The fridge's computer knows what you have got by scanning the barcodes on the items you put into it. It can tell how much food you have got – how much milk you have got, if you've got 5_____ eggs, how many tomatoes you have got or when there isn't 6_____ butter. 7_____ fridges can even talk to you. Ask, 'Is there 8_____ cheese?' and the fridge tells you, 'Yes, there is 9_____ cheese,' or 'No, there isn't 10_____ .' For people on 11_____ diet, the fridge tells you what you can or can't eat. Perhaps you can't have 12_____ meat or cakes – unfortunately, the fridge knows it and tells you!

Hāngi – a barbecue underground!

A hangi is a traditional Maori* barbecue. It's an old, old tradition and people in New Zealand prepare hangis on special family occasions. It takes five to six hours to prepare a hangi. The first step is to dig a large hole in the ground. Then you build a big fire in the hole and put some special volcanic stones** in the fire. The stones stay in the fire for two to three hours. The stones need to be very, very hot to cook the food. While the fire is burning, the rest of the family prepare the food. There's fish, chicken and lamb as well as potatoes, cabbage and other vegetables. The food goes into large metal boxes. When the fire stops burning, you put the food boxes in the hole with the hot stones and finally you cover the hole with earth. After two to three hours of very slow cooking, the food is ready to eat. When the boxes come out of the hole, the smell is just fantastic! After all the hard work and preparation, everybody is very hungry and the food tastes absolutely delicious!

1 People usually eat trifle on special occasions like Christmas or at parties. It's delicious and very sweet. My mum makes one every year at Christmas; everyone always eats it and there's never any left at the end of the meal.

2 One of my favourite hobbies is cooking. I find it very relaxing after a hard day at work. I collect cookbooks and have more than fifty! I like to make dishes from lots of different countries but one of my favourite dishes is a traditional British dessert called 'trifle'.

3 I make trifle all year round because my friends always ask for it. Every month, my friends and I have a dinner party. A different person cooks every time, and whenever it's my turn to cook, my friends always want ... trifle!

4 The main ingredients of trifle are sponge cake, custard, jelly, cream and fruit. You put the sponge cake in a bowl and pour fruit juice (or sherry) over it. Then you put jelly and custard on top of the cake, then cream and finally fruit. It's very easy to make.

9. Write a description of a favourite dish. Write about the ingredients of the dish, how you make it and why you like it.
