

Will and might for predictions

You are going to make predictions about yourself and explain your answers to your partner.

First look at the first section: People and elicit predictions about me (your teacher) first.
Do you think I'll make some new friends next summer?

Don't forget to use full sentences and natural language when you speak, e.g. I think / I'm sure you'll ..., I don't think you'll ..., I think you might ...,
You might not ..., etc.

✓ Tell your partner whether you agree with his/her predictions and why, e.g. I think I'll make some new friends next summer, because I'm going to ...

Work in pairs, taking turns to predict your partner's answers and agree or disagree with your partner's:

People 	won't	might not	might	will make some new friends in the summer speak to your mother today visit somebody in a foreign country next year see a teacher in the street this weekend have more than six grandchildren say 'I love you' to somebody later today

Travel 	won't	might not	might	will get a free flight abroad this year work abroad in the next five years visit every continent of the world in your lifetime ever climb mountains in the Himalayas go on a two-week holiday next summer see a lot of wild animals on your next holiday

Things 	won't	might not	might	will buy a house in the next five years get a new phone this year lose something this week break something this week borrow something from a friend this weekend tidy your home tonight

✓ Write three new predictions about your partner for one topic on the sheet.

FB: Tell us any interesting information you found out about your partner.
