Read the following paragraph. Pay attention to words and phrases that tell you when something happened.

General Elections in The Bahamas are usually held every five years. Before an election can be held, the Prime Minister must set a date. Eligible voters must then be registered in their various constituencies. Next, candidates wishing to contest the elections have to be nominated by at least five people. The various political parties also hold rallies at this time. On election day voters cast ballots for the candidate of their choice. Later that day the votes are tallied and, finally, the election results are broadcast.

Use 1-6 to sequence the events of the above passage.

____ Voters must be registered.

____ The election results are given.
