The image displays 10 distinct polyominoes, each composed of 6 squares. They are arranged in two columns of five. These are the hexominoes, which are the shapes that can be formed by joining six squares edge-to-edge. There are 23 hexominoes in total, but only 10 are shown here, including the 1x6 rectangle, the 2x3 rectangle, and various irregular shapes like the 'L' and 'Z' hexominoes.
