CUSTOMS AND TRADITIONS

There are many different customs and traditions in different parts of Britain. Some of you who are well 30 _____ with our customs in Britain know that in Cornwall there exist perhaps some of the oldest superstitions. On May the 8th, for example, all the people in the town get up early in the morning and dance through the streets a special dance to an old historic tune.

31 _____, some of the traditions have, as people became more educated, died out. Only to be revived in recent times. When 32 _____ about beliefs, customs and traditions we have to remember a few important things. 33 _____ these customs may appear strange to us they are not strange at all to the local people. No one knows when many of our traditions in England began, but they are still evident in many different aspects of our life. A lot of people here practise these customs, which are part of their 34 _____ life. It is only we – the outsiders – who show any real interest about them. We travel a lot to be on special days in special places and various feasts associated with religious figures and religion itself. I have come 35 _____ various traditions in different parts of our country along with other people interested in folklore and our historic past.

We have the belief that should it rain on St. Swithin's day it will continue to rain for forty days and forty nights. Of course, it never does, for England would sink. It is well known that many superstitions are based on pagan rites. These have been adopted by the religious brotherhood in our country and some of them have become a 36 _____ of everyone's life. Many of the older religious traditions have actually disappeared. But many still exist and many more exist rather less noticeably below the surface.
