The Mother Goat and the Seven Little Kids

☐ When the wolf woke up he was feeling thirsty, so he went to the river to drink. The heavy stones pulled him in, and he drowned. That was the end of the wolf.

☐ Soon there was a knock at the door. "Open the door, children dear, your mother is here with the food," said a soft voice. But the little kids knew from the black paws that it was the wolf. "We will not open the door," they cried out. "You are not our mother. You have black paws. You are the wolf." So the wolf ran to a baker who he had frightened before and told him to sprinkle white flour on his paws. He went back to the house and knocked on the door once more. The kids saw the white paws and thinking it was their mother they opened the door. The wolf came in and six of the kids were eaten. However, he could not find the seventh so he went to sleep in the fields.

☐ Once upon a time there was an old goat with seven little kids. One day she told her children she was going into the woods to get some food. "Be on your guard for the wolf. If he gets in, he will eat you all."

☐ When the mother came home, the seventh goat ran to her and explained what had happened. They went to the fields and found the wolf asleep. The mother cut open his stomach and out jumped the six little kids. Six large stones were placed in the wolf's stomach before the mother closed it again.
