II. Write the correct form of the word given in the brackets. (10point)

Passage 1.

My time in China had given me an enduring interest in Chinese art, so I decided to go to Liu Li Chang, where for centuries there has been an antiques market. Unfortunately, many things for sale there nowadays are modern (1.IMITATE)_____. Empty - handed and somewhat (2.ILLUSION)_____, I went into a tea house and sat through the usual ceremony, but there were (3.IDENTIFY) _____ differences here too: it seemed quicker and the tea lacked that extraordinary lingering scent. Thoroughly (4.HEART) _____, I returned to my hotel: one of the enormous, faceless places which have sprung up everywhere. Yet here, in a dark shop tucked away off the lobby, my melancholy mood disappeared, for I met a (5.SURVIVE) _____ from 1989, who remembered me instantly. Not everything had been entirely forgotten.

Passage 2

Mankind's intuition of freedom, and our identification of freedom with knowledge, sets us apart from animals. The animal's grasp of freedom is (6.SIGNIFY) _____ in comparison, being only the freedom to respond to external stimuli. The nearest creature to us on the (7.EVOLVE) _____ tree of life, the chimpanzee, can't retain an image for a sufficient length of time to be able to reflect on it. So animal's life is largely a matter of conditioned reflexes, performed in an (8.TERMINATE) _____ present; in short, animals are little more than machines with consciousness. While the animal is carried along (9.SUBMIT) _____ on the stream of time, mankind has certain capacities that (10.POWER) _____ us to resist the current or look into the future.

THE SAHARA MARATHON

One of the most amazing marathon races in the world is the Marathon of the Sands. It takes place every April in the Sahara Desert in the south of Morocco, a part of the world where temperatures can reach fifty degrees centigrade. The standard length of a marathon is 42.5 kilometres but (1) _____ one is 240 kilometres long and takes seven days to complete. It began in 1986 and now attracts about two hundred runners, the majority of (2) _____ ages range from seventeen to forty-seven. About half of them come from France and the rest from all over the world. From Britain it costs £2,500 to enter, which includes return air fares. The race is rapidly becoming more and more popular (3) _____, or perhaps because of, the harsh conditions that runners must endure. They have to carry food and (4) _____ else they need for seven days in a rucksack weighing no more than twelve kilograms. In (5) _____ to this, they are given a litre and a half of water every ten kilometres. Incredibly, nearly (6) _____ the runners finish the course. (7) _____ man, Ibrahim El Journal, took part in every race from 1986 to 2004. Runners do suffer terrible physical hardships. Sometimes they lose toenails and skin peels (8) _____ their feet. However, doctors are always on hand to deal (9) _____ minor injuries and to make sure that runners do not push (10) _____ too far.

III. Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.(10p)

Joanne scanned the area around her, her small frame straining above the pile of wood. She had to wriggle her way through the wood and rubble. It did not matter where she tried, they were all the same. The holes were too small and she used all her might to remove the obstacles, pushing and shoving them out of the way, the noise ringing into the night. She was imprisoned. The silence was a far cry from the explosion moments ago. Afraid to be heard, she tried to be as quiet as possible. It was an impossible and ludicrous task. The destruction left behind by the men was far greater than their numbers. Their goals had probably been achieved. Those who did not escape were probably dead.

Telephone lines had been cut and lights had been shut off moments before the much feared raids began. Except for the cut-off in communication, there was nothing to indicate that the men would soon arrive. Under the cover of darkness, the more fortunate ones had managed to escape. Those near the border climbed through the holes in the fence, to seek refuge in the neighbouring country.

For weeks, the government had warned of an impending attack by the group. Initial apprehension turned to fear when the expected day arrived. However, when nothing happened, everyone thought that the government had made a mistake. After all, how often within that past year had they failed to deliver what had been promised to the citizens. First, the new lands promised to the farmers after the massive insect attacks were insufficient and each farmer had to contend with land that was one third their original size. Then, there was the promise of opening the economy to the international community, allowing many to sell their handicraft overseas but this never materialised. The people soon became angry as they were being deceived and complacency about the raids was abounding in the community.

The environment was ripe for the triad attack. No one noticed the men ambling into the town. What made their attack even more shocking was that the multitude of people returning from work and sitting down to a meal did not even notice the seven men walking past their windows. Military uniform had been a common sight in the town ever since the government's warning was announced. There was no need for these men to run or hide. No one had seen them. Joanne inched her foot out of a gap and half crawled, half walked ahead. Every step she took was painful. Mounted up by the lack of water for hours, the pain in her leg was excruciating and the more she walked, the more bodies she saw. Arms and legs were sticking out from under piles of rubble and sometimes a lifeless face could be seen among the debris. Everyone she saw was dead. Despite her situation, Joanne hoped that she would not be able to find any of her family members.

Suddenly, she saw a movement among a pile of rubble. She ran the short distance forward, glad for any sign of life in the place. What she saw spurred her on and she pushed aside several pieces of wood and lifted an orange cloth, probably once a curtain. Groping about, she managed to locate the little body and using all her might, dragged it out. The child could have been more than five years old. He was covered in soot and his stomach heaved in and out in agony. His eyes were shut and only his breathing told her that he was still alive.

Joanne carried the child over her shoulder and squinted in the darkness, trying to locate her bearings. Her only hope was the border. Moments ago, she had wanted to forgo everything, thinking that it was probably better to lie in the darkness until it eventually overcame her and the feelings of loneliness would disappear. Now, she was encouraged to continue. If she could reach the border, she would be able to get help. Looking around, she ran in the direction of what looked like spots of bright yellow light.

1. What was causing "the noise" in the first paragraph?

- A. Her small frame straining above the pile of wood.
- B. Her wriggling through the wood and rubble.
- C. Her pushing and shoving the obstacles out of the way.
- D. The explosion heard moments ago.

2. Why were the lights "shut off" in the second paragraph?

- A. It enabled the people to escape from the place.
- B. It led them to the neighbouring country.
- C. It warned the people of the coming raids.
- D. It was shut inadvertently by the raiders.

3. The word "apprehension" in the third paragraph is closest in meaning to .....

- A. anxiety      B. clairvoyance      C. voidance      D. incongruity

4. It can be inferred from the passage that _____

- A. the government had yet to fail the people
- B. the strange men were dressed in military uniform
- C. the main target of the mentioned men were Joanne
- D. there were numerous indications of the men's arrival

5. What spurred Joanne to remove the wood and orange cloth?

- A. The child's stomach which was moving.
- B. The short distance between her and the child.
- C. The vague sight of a family member.
- D. The lifeless faces seen among the debris.

6. The word "excruciating" in the fourth paragraph can best be replaced by _____

- A. painless      B. discerning      C. piercing      D. powerful
