The International Space Station orbits the Earth every ninety minutes. There are normally three to ten astronauts on the station and they work there for six months.

Astronauts have very small cabins and they sleep in sleeping bags. Many astronauts have problems sleeping. It's noisy and it's hard to stop moving. Washing is also difficult - you can't take a shower. Astronauts eat three times a day. There isn't much fresh food and a lot of the food is instant - you just add hot water. Astronauts work about eleven hours a day. They do experiments, write reports and talk to scientists on Earth. Sometimes they do spacewalks to check the space station. They also exercise about two hours a day. At weekends astronauts clean the station.

There is also time to relax. There are often astronauts from different countries on the station and the atmosphere is great. Astronauts watch films, read, listen to music, browse the Internet, chat with friends online or play cards. But their favourite activity is watching our beautiful Earth. It's never boring!
